Read the text and answer the questions.

Happy Ending?

Part A:

It is Friday, September 15th at the Greens' house. Tim and Paula Green are spending a long weekend with their grandparents because their mum and dad are away on a trip to Germany to see the new friends they met on holiday last summer. The two children are really happy to be with their grandma and grandpa. They live five hours away from the Greens and do not see Tim and Paula very often. At the moment brother and sister are sitting in the living-room and are making plans for the weekend. They have got a problem.

Part B:

Paula: We're lucky that Grandma and Grandpa are staying with us for the weekend. We can watch the new 'Pirates of the Caribbean' DVD in the evening and eat lots of sweets. Mum doesn't like that, I know, but it's OK with Grandpa.

Tim: Oh yes. And it's great that Grandpa is here because there is a good football match against Manchester United – I must go there, you see.

Paula: Tim, you are not telling me that you and Grandpa are going to see the match alone? What about Grandma and me? Can't we do something together, Tim? Why don't we go into town and have some fun at the shops there?

Tim: Not again. Of course, we can go out together if you want to come with us. But Dad always says that girls aren't really interested in football. They don't see what's so interesting about it and they hate it. And I think Dad is right.

Paula: Actually, I can't say I hate it. It's just so boring, that's all. Do you know what I want to do on Saturday? Well, I want to go shopping with Grandma. Maybe she can buy me a nice pair of jeans – I can't wait to have them.

Tim: Oh dear, not with me, Paula.

Paula: Come on, Tim. Why not?

Tim: An afternoon in town when there is a big home match? That's too much. Listen, Paula: you and Grandma go shopping. Grandpa and me, we can go and see our team win, OK?

Paula: Wait Tim. Mum says that you need new trousers for your school uniform. Do you remember? Yesterday I saw some special offers in the big shop next to our favourite McDonald's and I think ...

Tim: OK, OK. Let's ask Grandpa what his plans are. He understands boys.

Part C:

Two weeks ago Grandpa Green was looking for a little present for Tim, but he did not have many ideas. What about a ticket for an exciting football match against Manchester United, he thought. It was already too late: he did not get any of the tickets for six or sixteen pounds and all the others were sixty pounds or more – that was too much for him. Grandma Green did not need a present for Paula because she knew why Paula wanted to go shopping with her: there were those fantastic blue jeans at the shopping centre ...

When the grandparents talked about their weekend with Tim and Paula, they started to make plans, too. Grandma Green was dreaming about a funny party in the living-room with lovely candles, big cakes, nice music and lots of people around. But Grandpa said that a party like that was not really for young boys. He had another idea. He wanted to organize a fun day in the park where there was time to let the children do what they really liked: play with friends, run around and have a picnic with food and drink. He thought that this was brilliant. “Well”, Grandma said, “I don’t know. Let’s wait and see what Tim and Paula are going to do with us. This weekend we haven’t got any surprise for them, but that’s not too bad.”

Part C:

5. When Grandpa went to the ticket office there were only tickets for ...

60 pounds	6 pounds	16 pounds
<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>

Hi Tom,

Thank you for your long e-mail. At the moment we're busy in the school because we must write every week a lot of tests.

It was my friend's 11st birthday last weekend and she invited a lot of pupils to her party. Everybody came and she was so happy. We met at two o'clock at the cinema. There we bought some popcorn and 15 lemonade bottles. We watched 'Harry Potter IV'. Of course, the film was not for little childs like my brother, but it was exciting and we really liked it.

After the film we went to Christine's house by bus because she wanted open her presents.

Later it gave a big cake and we talked about our teachers. That was really funny and we laugh a lot.

There was nothing on TV in the evening so we played computer games and heard music until the lights went out. First we didn't said a word, but suddenly shouted one of the girls for help and it was like in the Harry Potter film. Everybody was worried. After some very long minutes my mother came in and brought us any candles. At 9 o'clock my friends' parents came to fetch them and everybody went at home.

Well, I must stop now because I have hunger!

I hope Dad is ready with the dinner... 😊

Write soon.

Bye

Julia
